

Red lights, dark room, the buzz before the show starts is in the air. This is the moment that Road Engine Dreams lives for – the intense rush that comes just as they hit the stage.

R.E.D. has always been a performance band at the core. They take pride in the quality of their recordings – including their new self-titled CD, engineered by Doug Fury – but the shows are what keep them going through the tough days and long nights of a band on the road.

When R.E.D. starts to play, their unique take on classic rock instantly grabs a crowd. They're veterans at winning over new audiences, and are known to have new fans chanting "R.E.D!" before the night is out.

Lead guitarist and singer Chris Cardinal take inspiration from classic rock guitar heroes like Slash and Angus Young – and it comes through in both his wicked guitar solos and rock anthem style. Buddy Cardinal and Gabe McCormick round out the front line of the band with power rhythm guitar chords and a hard-driving bass sound that fills up any room.

Solid in the back is the K'aajuu G'aaya – the latest member to join the group – whose heavy beats radiate from the stage.

With a solid group of dedicated fans and regular appearances on Vancouver radio and the North American festival circuit, R.E.D. can quickly fill a room with classic rock fans who'll rock out until the show is done, then beg for more.
